MOUNT LOFTY HOUSE

In 1886, Mount Lofty House was sold to respected businessman Arthur Waterhouse, chairman of the Bank of Adelaide and a director of the South Australian Gas Company. He used the building as his summer residence for the next thirty-six years, and made substantial changes to the structure. At the southern end, a basement was constructed to contain three rooms and a staircase. Above it, a grand entrance porch was erected, leading to a large hall and reception room. Along the eastern flank of the building, an elevated verandah with a jarrah floor unified the whole structure, and it led to the famous feature he introduced – a grand picture window overlooking Piccadilly Valley, located within what is now called the Arthur Waterhouse Lounge
